DECREASE OF TEMPERATURE OVER ROCKY MOUNTAINS

Southeastern States Had Highest Temperature Yesterday.

An extensive barometric trough formed over the Great Plains states, and the lower Missouri valley yesterday, with two centers of atmospheric depression located over Missouri and South Dakota, respectively. These disturbances have produced light to heavy rainfall over the Missouri and Arkansas valleys.

The Arizona-Mexico low pressure area remained almost stationary all through the day, with out causing rainfall. The moderate heat wave is moving slowly off the north Atlantic coast, although the temperatures remain abnormally high—Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, Western New York, and the St. Lawrence valley.

The northwestern cold wave progressed rapidly southeastward yesterday effecting a general decrease in temperature of 6 to 12 degrees over the southern Rocky Mountain region. Local showers have occurred over the east Gulf and south Atlantic states, and the Ohio valley. The north Pacific high pressure area is progressing slowly inland. There is an increase in temperature of 4 to 8 degrees over the upper Mississippi and lower Missouri valleys due to the lower pressure area over Missouri and North Dakota. High winds of 44 miles per hour were reported from Oklahoma. Rainfall of 1.40 inches was reported from Kansas City, and 1.36 inches from Knoxville, Tenn. Sunshine was general all over the country yesterday excepting small areas of cloudiness over the central valleys, the Great Lakes, and the Pacific states. The highest temperature recorded was 82 degrees at Glendale, Charleston, and Hattiesburg. The lowest was 16 degrees at Durango and Flagstaff. Thunderstorms were observed at Spokane, Kansas City, Oklahoma, Pittsburg and Dodge City. Pressure conditions indicate fair weather for Phoenix and vicinity today, with not much change in temperature.

Those relics of an almost prehistoric age were brought to Phoenix and installed in a couple of rooms on the first floor of the capital building.

After that the business grew, but not perceptibly until Captain Ingalls' administration began. Adjoining rooms were absorbed until all the first floor of the building north of
